The difference between the two options will help guide the Council on final location and available budget. A majority vote in favor of the last option will be perceived as the public rejecting the concept of bonding and adjusting taxes to pay for either project. The referendum is not a vote on final design, just the concept of location and whether to spend the money. Final designs, which have a significant cost to create, will come in 2021 if the public approves a location and the spending. Ian Rigg, Evansville City Administrator & Finance Director is in to discuss the referendum.
